The Comique presented to-night and to-morrow the great war drama, "The Guerrilla," in motion pictures. It shows the great advantage a motion picture version of a play has over a play presented on the stage. In the stage version of this great play, the cavalry duel is spoken of in the pictures. It is an actual happening and is one of the most thrilling situations ever witnessed in motion pictures. A troop of Union cavalry dashing on a mission of rescue suddenly comes upon a troop of mounted guerrillas, for a moment the horses of both forces are thrown back on their haunches, but for an instant only. Then there is a flash of sabres, both sides leap forward with a mighty bound. Suddenly a Union cavalryman is seen to break through the guerrilla line, only to turn again and urge his horse on the fray. The battle rages until the guerrilla forces are scattered. The Union forces dash on their way and accomplish their mission. There are so many thrilling events crowded into this film that one is in a constant state of apprehension regarding the safety of the heroine. Two other numbers on the program are just the opposite, being comedies of the funniest kind.
